The sale, which begins at 2 o'clock, is positive, and terms are cash. Mr. Dinsmore wishes it understood that he will continue to do all kinds of repairing and carpet cleaning as usual.

The Republican Town Committee would again remind the Republicans of this town of the caucus to-night at 7.45, in the Town Hall, to elect delegates to the several conventions and transact any other business. They would also urge the importance of attending, and earnestly hope that it may be larger than many times heretofore.

Rev. Frederic Palmer will lecture on the Passion Play of Ober-Ammergau, in the Town Hall, Boxford, Thursday evening, Sept. 8, at 8 o'clock. The stereopticon pictures illustrating this lecture were taken at Ober-Ammergau in 1890. The lecture is in aid of the Town Hall Fund, and in case of storm on Thursday will be postponed till Friday evening. Admission 25 cents.

Styles for 1892.

We invite the readers of our paper to glance at the Fall Hat announcement of the progressive and correct hatters, W. H. Gile & Co., which appears to-day. It is to the point and should be read by every person in this vicinity. Their window display, which eclipses anything ever attempted in this city, is worth going a long way to see. There displayed in the most attractive way are all the leading and popular styles in hats, both soft and stiff, for the fall of 1892.

Representative James B. Smith has our thanks for a copy of the "Blue Book" for 1892.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert L. Bodwell, of Providence, are visiting L. W. Bodwell.

C. B. Mason has the contract to build the new residence for Mr. C. A. Booth on Punchard Ave. W. P. Regan is the architect.

The family of George C. Lyle has removed to Lawrence.

Alexander Dundas broke his collar bone yesterday, as the result of trying some circus movements on a trapeze. The rope broke and the boy fell, striking on his shoulder.

Miss Gertie Buchanan had her arm quite badly cut last Tuesday when trying to close a window in the room where she works. It came down too quickly, breaking the glass, which did the damage.

Will the person who picked up a package on Central Street, Thursday, kindly leave it at T. A. Holt's store and greatly oblige the owner.

The Board of School Committee will hold a meeting to-night in the Superintendent's office.

Andover was well represented at the Band Concert in Lawrence Monday night, patronage on the street cars being quite heavy.

During the recent cold rain storm several patrons of the electric road were anxiously inquiring for the closed cars and asking why they were not run. The reason it seems is that the box cars are undergoing repairs preparatory to the fall and winter traffic and could not be taken out. The cars are being practically made over, new dashers, platforms, window casings, doors, ceilings and floorings being made, and each car is being painted and decorated artistically. The coloring and lettering on the sides is of the best, and the cars will easily be mistaken for new ones. The running gear and trucks are also receiving attention.

The Maine correspondence of the Congregationalist says:

At Ellsworth, where the church bell on a hot evening invited strangers to the midweek prayer meeting, the little company was earnestly praying for the pastor elect, Mr. David L. Yale of Meriden, Ct., an Andover graduate of the last class who is to be settled there early in September. Mr. McDonald, an Andover student, is spending the summer, as he has previously done, in earnest work among the fishermen of Outer Long Island, and Mr. Pringle of the same seminary is shepherding the little flock at Isle au Haut with a fidelity and devotion promising well for the foreign missionary service, which he desires to enter.

Brownie's Dream.

Dear Townsman:

Just a word this week to tell you of my dream about the hotel and its projector. It came to me last Sunday night after reading the said projector's latest effusion on the subject, and as I dreamed I beheld a little man with tears in his eyes which he was constantly wiping away. He seemed deeply troubled and I heard him murmur, "why won't they tell me? I must know it all, and I must have something new each week for it depends on me to develop this thing."

Let's see, now what shall I say next? The present house will face Elm Street with an ell over against the band stand, the stable will be put on top of the grain store and the new hotel will be built next to it, in front of the rest. No, that isn't right. Let's "we" see. Oh, the new hotel will face the square, with the stable in the basement and the dining-hall in the cupola, it will be built of wood, or brick or stone, or adamant or paper, or plaster or cement, or something else, ("we" may not be just right) and will have four stories and a driveway, with a hammock hung on the front door, there will be an electric bell connecting the front door with the intelligence office and somebody will always be at hand to "please start me." The hotel will have four chambers, a meat market, and a pool room on the first floor, and—but here I awoke and wondered. Say, TOWNSMAN, do you really believe we will have a hotel? It is the pressing need of the town.

Yours,
BROWNIE.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that contain Mercury.

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, contains no mercury, and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure, be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, O., by F. J. Cheney & Co. Sold by Druggists price 75 cents per bottle.

Roger's Circus.

My annual vacation week began August 28. At evening I made a solemn resolve to cease for six days from all schemes for enrolment, to eat three meals a day if possible and sleep every morning regularly from 12 to 6 o'clock, rising with the sun to laugh all day at everybody and everything, even the weather. Oh, if Roger hadn't taken such a dislike to that conceited young Brownie, if his brook would only get a bit sweeter, if he would only come back this week and camp around with us in the shady, ferny corners! A half hour or so over a railway guide to the Grand Canon of Arizona and "The Far West Sketches" of that dear Jessie Fremont which you must all read, had brought to my vision the mighty peaks and heliotrope hedges of "our Italy," when suddenly an attack upon my outside sound gate brought in wild yells of "Head him off, Harry!" "Go for him!" "Ow! Oh! Ah! Ya!" in all conceivable pitches of the masculine gamut. A clutch like nothing but old Roger's, seized upon, dragged fiercely, and nearly hurled me through the observation window as his new Kodak was thrust before my staring eyes.

The 11 o'clock electric bull's-eye, the stately arched candelabra, fiery Mars, glorious old Jupiter, with the shining host around them, looked calmly down on the lively panorama of this Orthodox revel up and down the Square (both squares, Andover and Elm). Who could resist such a funny juvenile pig, two pigs, according to Roger's account. The doublings, the dodgings, presenting points for captains of nines and elevens, the porcine finesse, the resources of human strategy had free play. All the Delsarte poses in Butterick's Delineator and some startling variations of the Ling movements were developed by the athletic and graceful young gamblers who wound up a hard day's service with this fascinating sport. "I almost fell on him," "I'd a grabbed him if he had been a little cleaner." The pig I bet upon went around that body of besiegers like the little cruiser in Boston harbor about the big White Squadron. My piggy just flirted with our "friend of children." Just as the fun was at its height, and Indian, white man, motor-man, pig, were all shrieking and "eking" in chorus, time was called and away ambled the "devils" down Essex street to the Shawshin from whence they came, the witch train moved slowly to its plunge towards the Merrimack, Roger darted off to his perch on the big slabs of granite where he overlooks the workmen now busy over his water-way, and I shut out the stars wondering whether man or beast most enjoyed that meeting.

Getting the Most.

Some men and women have a genius for getting the most out of their surroundings and resources. They will get ease, refinement and variety out of an income which yields another only the bare necessities of life. There is no magic about this skill, although it often seems to be a gift quite as much as an acquirement. It is, in reality, a fine intelligence brought to bear on the problem of practical living; it is a very close and exact adjustment between opportunities and resources. To make two spears of grass grow where one grew before has been characterized as a genuine achievement, a positive contribution to the prosperity of humanity.

By thought and skill to make one wise dollar do the work of two stupid dollars is to accomplish positive good for one's self and others. The easy wastefulness, the indolent prodigality, of much of our living betrays intellectual obtuseness; to secure a large income and get inadequate returns from it is to be wise on one side of life and stupid on the other. Many men have this partial and fragmentary ability; they are successful money makers, but they are incompetent money spenders; they know how to accumulate a fortune, but they do not know how to invest it. The man who adds intelligence to a dollar practically doubles it; he gets as much out of his income as his neighbor who multiplies it by two; for purchasing power is the test of value.

The woman who, with small means, maintains and diffuses that atmosphere of repose and ease which is a woman's supreme contribution to a home, is a notable contributor to the sum total of happiness. She solves the problem of adjusting resources to opportunity; and that, in itself, is one of the most encouraging achievements made by men. Most of us are only partly emancipated; we are servants of our conditions and circumstances, rather than their masters. We spend more than we are able, and never command the things we care for most; we do not plan intelligently and pursue our plan persistently.

We lack skill in adjusting our incomes to our opportunities; we lack the genius for getting the most out of things. We carry with us a sense of failure, of being baffled by things which we ought to brush out of the way. One must make liberal use of brains in small as well as in great things to win complete success. To make circumstances take the impression of our purpose, rather than to be shaped by them, is one of the real satisfactions of life; and this can be done only by those who put intelligence and thought into expenditure as well as into income.—Christian Union.

Old Time Hired Man.

Dr. Edward Everett Hale in his last paper, "A New England Boyhood," in the September Atlantic, says of an old-time New England Hired Man:

The few New England children who still read the Rollo books will have pleasant remembrances of Jonas and Beech-nut, in whom Mr. Jacob Abbott has presented for posterity the hired boy of New England country life. In life in a little town like Boston, this hired boy might grow to be the hired man, and, as in Fuller's exceptional case, might grow to be a hundred years old, or nearly that, without changing that condition. If that happened, his presence in a family became a factor of importance to the growing children. In the case of Fuller, if, as he supposed, he was born in 1790, he was thirty-two years old when, in 1822, he took me in his arms, when I was an hour old.

Fuller, then, had been a country boy, who came down from Worcester County to make his fortune. I do not know when, but it was before the time of the short war with England. He expected to be, and was, the hired boy and hired man in one and another Boston family. Early in the business, he was in Mr. William Sullivan's service. He was driving Mr. Sullivan out of town, one day, when they found Roxbury street blocked up by the roof of the old meeting-house, which had been blown into the street by the gale of 1815. Afterwards he was in Daniel Webster's service, and here also he took care of horses and carriages. He was a born tyrant, and it was always intimated that Mr. Webster did not fancy his rule. Anyway, he came from the Websters to us, I suppose when Mr. Webster went to Congress, in the autumn of 1820; and, in one fashion or another, he lived with our family, as a most faithful vassal or tyrant, for sixty-six years from that time. I say "vassal or tyrant," for this was a pure piece of feudalism; and in the feudal system the vassal is often a tyrant, while the master is almost always a slave. So is it that the memories of my boyhood are all mixed up with memories of Fuller.

I have spoken of him in connection with Miss Whitney's school. Here was a faithful man Friday, who would have died for any of us, so strong was his love for us, yet who insisted on rendering his service very much in his own way. If my father designed a wooden horse for me, to be run on four wheels, after the fashion of what were called velocipedes in those days, he would make the drawings, but it would be Fuller's business to take them to the carpenter's and see the horse made. If we were to have heavy hoops from water-casks, Fuller was the person who conducted the negotiation for them. There was no harm in the tutorship to which we were thus entrusted. He never used a profane or impure word while he was with us children; and as he was to us an authority in all matters of gardening, of carpentry, or driving and the care of horses, we came to regard him as, in certain lines, omniscient and omnipotent. If now the reader will bear in mind that this omniscient and omnipotent person, at once the Hercules and the Apollo of our boyhood, could not read, write, or spell so well as any child four years old who had been twelve months at Miss Whitney's school, that reader may understand why a certain scorn of book-learning sometimes stains these pages, otherwise so pure. And if the same reader should know that this same Fuller always spoke in superlatives, and multiplied every figure with which he had to do by hundreds or by thousands, he may have a key to a certain habit of exaggeration which has been detected in the present writer. "They was ten thousand men tryin' to git in. But old Reed, he wouldn't let 'em." This would be his way of describing the effort of four or five men to enter some place from which Reed, the one constable of Boston, meant to keep them out.

The Youth's Game.

There is one thing that the national tournament at Newport has demonstrated, and that is that the game of tennis is not a stationary one. Those who have found their only pleasure in foot ball or horse racing have been wont to regard tennis as simple "child's play." As one has put it, "only an everlasting tossing of the ball." But the way in which the old champions of the courts have been distanced at Newport by younger men shows that there is more than mere "tossing of the ball" back and forth. Not only is careful study of the plays called for, and good judgment as to strokes and probable effects, but agility and quickness of arm and wrist movements are vital factors. For that reason it is not surprising that the younger men surpass the older ones and that a new series of expert players appears in the tournaments of each season. Other things being equal, it is the youth's game.—Boston Journal.

"IT MIGHT BE A GOOD DEAL WORSE."

The Black Bootblack's Philosophy of Hot Weather and Shipwreck.

"Good morning, suh: have a shine, suh," said the black bootblack, as he saw one of his regular customers coming down the corridor. The regular customer sat down in the chair, inwardly prayed that none of his friends might come along before he got out of it and made some original observation about the weather.

"Yes, suh," replied the bootblack; "it is suttin' a very hot day. I—well—no, suh, I won't say nothing about it, because it might be a good deal wus. There might be a big flood or a wind to blow us all away. Yes, suh, that's what I always say when I hear people talkin' about how bad things is.

"I says, 'Don't you go and say nothing, because it might be a good deal wus.' I remember one time I was out sailin' with six other people and four of 'em was ladies; yes, suh; that was on the James river, and a squall struck the boat and she was just tippin' all 'round, and the ladies, they was just scared to death and they all yelled that we got to go back.

"But, I says: 'Don't say nothing; it might be a good deal wus. If we try to go back the wind'll hit us harder and we might tip over.' But it wa'n't any use; the ladies kept hollerin' that we got to go back, and the captain put her 'round and she got caught right between two waves and she went to the bottom and five of 'em was drowned. Yes, suh; all the ladies was drowned and the captain was drowned. I just struck out for the shore, I tell you. I wa'n't goin' to get drowned for nobody.

"Could I save any of the others? I didn't see none of the others; I didn't want to see none of 'em. I just got to the shore; that's all I wanted. Then I found a man with a boat and we started out, and in a minute we see the other man comin' down the river and we pulled him in, and the ones that was drowned, some of 'em wasn't found for two days, and then they was 'way down the river.

"That's what I say, as long as I'm alive it might be wus. I never hurt nobody, and I don't want nobody to touch me. Anybody can steal my money or my clothes or anything; I just say, 'Give me my life.' They can have anything I got, only don't hurt me. I know I got to die some time, that's certain, but I don't want nobody to murder me. No chance, suh! Thank you, suh. Shine!"—New York Tribune.

Dialects of China.

It is true that the inhabitants of Peking, Canton, Shanghai, Futwa and Amoy speak Chinese. But as to other parts of the country, it is also true that a citizen of the places named cannot understand the inhabitants any more easily than can a Berliner an Englishman, or a Parisian a Dutchman. Thus the position of the Chinaman in his own country, where various so-called dialects are spoken, is rather peculiar. The Chinese dialects have nothing in common with the patois, or conversational forms of language. They are used by the highest and lowest classes the savants and uneducated, the officials and the coolies. The dialect is a language by itself. The various dialect forms, it is true, are related to one another in somewhat the same manner as the Arabic to the Hebrew, Syrian and other Semitic tongues, or German to English, Dutch, Danish, Swedish, etc.

If it is desirable to classify the numerous dialects they may be divided into the Canton, Hakka, Amoy, Swatow, Shanghai, Ningho, the Hainanese and the Mandarin. The youngest of these dialects is the Mandarin. Mandarin, contrary to the general impression, is not the universal language of China. The Canton tongue resembles the ancient Chinese spoken 3,000 years ago more closely than the Mandarin. The Hakka shows also traces of great antiquity. It is much older than the Mandarin, almost equaling in point of age the Canton tongue, or Cantonese. The same thing may be said of the Swatow, Amoy and Shanghai dialects. In general we may say that the languages spoken in southeastern China show traces of the ancient Chinese tongue, while the Mandarin tongue is modern.—Ostasintischer Lloyd.

The Ethics of the Scarfpin.

With the regulation Teck, palpably madeup scarf, that is not an imitation of any known that may be made by the wearer, the scarfpin is stringently tabooed. It enjoys in such a pseudo-utilization almost as much significance as it would if stuck in the middle of a pincushion, and indeed about the same effect on the beholder.

The four-in-hand or cravat when tied in this way requires that the pin be not inserted in one corner, as was permissible when the smaller scarfs and lilliputian pins were worn. Nor in the middle of the crosspiece, with a trite and stilted suggestiveness. But in order to come as near as possible to the center of the space seen through the waistcoat opening, and because it appears to give a savor of utility in seeming to hold the knot intact, there is the best excuse for having it penetrate the middle of the tie, just upon the lower edge of the crossfold.

Never with a Windsor tie or a cravat have the slightest indication of jewelry.—Clothier and Furnisher.

Patrolman Julius Zeidler

Of the Brooklyn, N. Y., Police Force, gladly testifies to the merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla. His wife takes it for dizziness and indigestion and it works charmingly. ## A. W. Stearns &amp; Co., - Lawrence.

The Fall season opens early here for many reasons. If you were to go into most stores about this time there would not be much to see except a lot of rags, tags and odds and ends left over from the summer stock.

Here it is all different. Counters and shelves all full of choice things for the coming season; goods fresh from the custom house with the trade-marks and wrappers of the German, French and English makers. Also the very best products of our own American looms, which are but little if any behind the foreign stuffs either in style or quality.

One reason for this early stocking up, and this is really the most important one, is that now we can have our pick of the markets, and in this way we are sure to secure the rarest novelties, and by paying out cold money on delivery of the goods we get all the extra discounts. The wise merchant in every town does the same, and whatever is left goes to Mr. Old Fogey, who hangs back and says, "Oh, there's plenty of time." Yes, there is plenty of time but it should not be wasted, and we advise you to do as we do, buy early and get the tid-bits; be a leader, not a straggler.

Now for the stock. Of course an adequate description of such an immense and varied assortment of dress fabrics in such a limited space is out of the question. It would take a good big book to do justice to the whole stock, but a few general items may be given here. For verification and additional information a personal inspection of the stock will be necessary.

To begin with we have three lines of plain Twills in every desirable shade at 50c, 75c and $1.00.

Also a superior line of Storm Serges at 50c, 75c, $1.00 and $1.25.

The same applies to Blacks with the addition of other styles, such as Camel's Hair, Foulè, Silk Wraps, and Drap d'ète.

The novelties are choice and in nearly every case there is but one dress of a style. French Broche, English Matelasse and changeable effects of the most artistic and elaborate designs in colorings of the most approved order. The prices are within everybody's reach, and if we can't suit you no one can.

It is to be sincerely regretted that the Andover Case must again claim attention. Judge Bishop, in his able opening speech for the Trustees, voiced the prevailing opinion in his pointed sentence, "We submit that it should be dismissed for the further reason that it is stale." Andover people and the hosts of friends of Prof. Smyth everywhere will most earnestly hope for a quick and final squelching of the whole affair by the visitors.

Whether Lizzie Borden is guilty of murder or not, the star chamber inquest, the judge of inquest serving as judge of hearing, the man who discovered the insignificant hatchet with which it would be impossible to do the deed, the medical examiner's blood spots and several other outrageous and ridiculous phases of the terrible affair will long be remembered. We have always been taught to believe a person innocent till proven guilty, but here is an effort to reverse this teaching.

The Andover Case Revived.*Trustees Claim that no New Trial can be Held.

The hearing in the supposed-to-have-been-ended case of Prof. Smyth before the Board of Visitors on charges of heresy preferred by Drs. Wellman and Lanphear, occurred in Bartlett Chapel yesterday. At the previous hearing the Trustees were not summoned to appear, but as the court decided them to be proper parties, they were present this time, that is, all except three who were unavoidably detained. The Board of Visitors, as now made up, consists of Dr. Walker of Hartford, Dr. Quint of Boston, and Judge Marshall of Lowell, the last named being the only one of the original board which condemned Prof. Smyth.

The hearing opened at eleven o'clock, Dr. Walker presiding. After some formal proceedings Prof. S. E. Baldwin of New Haven, counsel for Prof. Smyth, spoke in support of the objections which had been filed against re-opening the case. He said:

"The supreme judicial court of Massachusetts has pronounced the trial which placed nearly six years ago irregular and the finding against Prof. Smyth null and void; but the court did not remit the case to this board for a new trial. On the contrary, it dismissed it. Therefore, there is nothing left to try. No one in some way connected with the Theological Seminary can become a party to a trial before the Visitors; Messrs. Wellman and Lanphear ask to be heard as individuals, not as even claiming any such connection. Undoubtedly, Dr. Wellman, in his capacity as a trustee, could have had a standing before the tribunal, had he appeared officially; but even then he could have done so only after having first presented his complaint to his associates on the Board of Trustees and taken, if he so desired, an appeal from their decision. It is contrary to the principles of justice," says the court, "that a man's case should be tried by those who have already decided against him."

Judge Bishop of the Superior Court bench and one of the Trustees spoke for them in quite a long but very able and interesting manner. He devoted his attention mainly to the English law in regard to visitatorial principles because the founders of the Seminary had used these for their foundation. His principle arguments follow:

FIRST.

By the law of England and the uniform practice thereunder there are two methods in which the powers of Visitors can be exercised:—

By a visitation ex proprio motu, which can take place only at the time fixed by the statutes of the institution.

The Andover statutes fix the time as once in each year. The law recognizes two classes of visitation: one arising from the sole prerogative of the Visitor, which is to be exercised at a general visitation; the other upon appeal by some person entitled to promote the office of Visitor,—that is, some person visitable, liable to be affected by the visitatorial power; in other words, some person on the foundation, partaking of the immediate support or benefit of the foundation or claiming such immediate support or benefit. It is clear that according to the law of England, from the beginning the functions of Visitors have been discharged in one of the above ways; that a visitation proceeds from the Visitor alone, unaided and unembarrassed by contestants as parties before him, and is the Visitors' own investigation of the condition of the institution over which he is placed; that the hearing of complaints by a Visitor is a different thing, and consists in the hearing of complaints from those only who have a right to be heard,—that is, from the corporation as a whole, or from any participant in the charity or person on the foundation, or claimant of the benefits thereof; and that the method by which the complaints of any person entitled to complain can be brought to the Visitor is by his appeal from a denial by the governing corporation, or board of trustees, or the rights which he claims, and that this is the only method.

The Andover statutes were written in the light of the English practice and law, by men who were more familiar with English procedure in this respect than men of modern times. Moreover, they expressly state that the institution is to be conducted upon "visitatorial principles" (Associate Statutes, Art. XXXIII). The "visitatorial principles" which had prevailed for centuries; they did not mean to set up a different method of their own.

This construction leaves to the earlier statutes their full force, and maintains an entire consistency between the earlier and later statutes. The immediate care and government of the institution was given to the Trustees by the original statutes (original Constitution, Articles XIII., XIV., XXXI., XXXIV.), and the visitatorial supervision of it to the Visitors by the Associate and Additional Statutes.

It is a mistake to confound visitatorial and administrative duties: the Visitors are to perform the one, the Trustees the other. To judge of complaints in the first instance is administration: to determine the correctness of decisions thus made is visitation. Any other construction gives the performance of the same class of duties to Visitors and Trustees indiscriminately, and enables a person who thinks himself aggrieved to go to the one or the other, according to which tribunal he thinks will be most favorable to him. It destroys method in the procedure, and introduces disorder, and renders nugatory a good part of the original statutes.

SECOND.

Suppose this is a complaint, these persons have no standing to prosecute it, for two reasons:—

They are not participants in the charity or persons on the foundation, nor do they claim to be. They were students in the Seminary, though this fact does not appear in their petition, and doubtless at that time might have brought the heterodoxy of the then Professors to the attention of the Trustees, and by appeal to the Visitors. There are two out of the over one thousand unstarred names in the General Catalogue. Is it the law that each of these many gentlemen can promote the visitatorial office? One of these gentlemen, Dr. Wellman, is a Trustee, though that fact nowhere appears in the paper we are called upon to answer, which he signs individually. We do not argue that if, after a hearing before the Trustees of any grievance or ground of objection which he thought existed, he had, in case of an adverse decision, appealed to the Visitors, he would not have been entitled to a hearing. Doubtless he would, and that is the course the Trustees supposed he intended to pursue; but his attitude in the present hearing is that of an individual merely, going directly to the Visitors.

The Trustees wish to say that such an investigation at any and all times by the Board of Visitors they will welcome sincerely. They hope that the new Board of Visitors will by personal and repeated examinations of all the affairs of this Seminary, and all the teaching therein, make themselves entirely familiar with everything that is going on in it. The Trustees promise the Visitors that their aid shall not be wanting to make all the examinations and investigations of the Visitors effectual to the thorough understanding by them of all matters connected with the Seminary.

But, if this is the character of the present proceeding, what duty have the gentlemen who present this petition to perform about it, and in what way can the Board of Visitors be by them assisted in the discharge of duties which it is incumbent upon the Visitors to perform? It is the duty of the visitatorial office to make visitations. Are these gentlemen aids or assistants in the work? What right have they to claim to be? Who has given them authority to see to it that the Visitors perform their duties? Can they not trust the impartiality, the fidelity, and the sound understanding upon theological questions of the Board of Visitors?

THIRD.

For the foregoing reasons we submit that the petition in this case should be dismissed. We submit that it should be dismissed for the further reason that it is stale. The amended complaint was filed nearly six years ago. Six annual visitations of the Seminary by the Visitors have since taken place. During the intervening time Dr. Smyth and his associates have been performing their work in a manner to be known and understood by the Visitors Through evil and through good report they have gone on in the discharge of their duties. In this time Dr. Smyth has taken the creed. If there is heterodoxy in his teachings or beliefs, or in the teachings or beliefs of any of his associates, we ask the Visitors to find it out, and we will aid them by every means in our power; but we ask them to do it by regular methods; we ask them to do it in the light of all the teaching these men are giving, and all the influence they are exerting, in this Seminary; we ask them to do it of their own motion, governed by the impartial spirit and the scholarly intelligence which will actuate them, and unattended by those whose partisanship unfits them for such a duty. If this Seminary is leading men to error, we have the strongest duty to wish it to be discovered. If it is leading men to light, and giving them a sound and strong basis of preparation to enable them to go forth and bring mankind to a knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, we feel assured that this fact will appear.

After dinner Dr. Wellman took the floor, but spoke very briefly, conceding the point so clearly shown that he had no legal standing before this body. He had unshaken confidence in the Board of Visitors to do what is right. He stated that he appeared by permission and authority from the Board of Visitors. They understand the Board of Visitors can have a visitation or judicial procedure. He insisted quite warmly that the question should not be a legal one but a theological discussion.

Dr. Lanphear said a few words in support of his co-complainant. His opinions in regard to Prof. Smyth had not changed in all these years. There were six points on which he would like to be heard.

At this point a somewhat lively discussion took place between Drs. Walker and Wellman, as to just the position in which the latter considered himself to stand. Dr. Wellman replied, in substance, that having, with others, brought certain complaints to the notice of the Visitors, the latter expressed a preference that the former should formulate and prosecute definite charges. Replying to further and more searching questions by Dr. Walker, Dr. Wellman admitted that the Visitors did not request a prosecution, but merely expressed a desire that in case the matter was pushed it should be in the manner described.

Drs. Fiske and Vose, both of the Board of Trustees, declared the desire of the Board of Trustees to promote the interests of the Seminary in every thing and not to cover up or conceal anything. They were as anxious for its welfare as the complainants could be, and they courted the fullest inquiry by the Visitors, only they wanted it done in a regular and proper way.

Right here the fact came out that the complainants were not ready to proceed, but wanted action postponed for quite a long time, Dr. Lanphear suggesting that it be after the meeting of the American Board next October. The Trustees and Prof. Smyth insisted that there be no delay, as the notices were served fully six weeks ago.

The last address of the day was by Prof. Smyth himself and he insisted with pathetic earnestness that there should be no unnecessary delay. He was now in the 30th year of his service in the Seminary. He was growing gray. He had grown gray pretty rapidly in the past six years. He had some work that he would like to do yet. How much longer was this burden to hang over his head? Prof. Smyth's touching appeal elicited spontaneous applause, the first manifestation of feeling during the day.

After this the Board said it would take the matter under advisement and so adjourned the hearing until next Tuesday at 10.45 A. M. in the same place.

Charged with Arson.

Since the fire which destroyed the buildings belonging to Charles Mears at Lowell Junction on Tuesday of last week the opinion has continued to grow upon the minds of the people that it was of incendiary origin. Chief of Police Cheever, who was present at the time of the fire, began at once to look into the case, and after a thorough investigation, he thought suspicion pointed strongly to Bertie Mears, son of the owner of the ruined buildings, as the incendiary. So on Sunday, having procured a warrant, he arrested the youth and locked him up in the police station. The Mears boy is between 18 and 19 years old, and though held on a serious charge he appeared calm and cool and confident that he should be exonerated.

The case came up for a hearing before Judge Poor Monday afternoon. The defendant was represented by Lawyer Walter Coulson of Lawrence. The first witness called was Harry Beverstock, who lived in the house in question. Mr. Beverstock is quite hard of hearing and did not seem to know much about the case, or, if he did, he did not tell it. He said the young man came into the house and asked for a match to light a cheroot, and he told him to help himself, showing him the box. He then went out and in about five minutes came back and asked me to bring a pail. I looked out and saw the barn full of smoke. Cross-examined by Lawyer Coulson, no new facts were revealed, except that he saw the boy light the cheroot.

C. H. Gordon of Lowell, a locomotive engineer, was next put on the witness stand. He was engaged as engineer by the Boston and Maine railroad and at this time was shifting cars near and in plain sight of the buildings. Saw the boy about 4.30 going from the house toward the barn with something which looked like a pail on his arm. Next saw smoke and fire in the barn and gave an alarm by blowing the whistle of the engine. Also saw boy afterwards going towards the shanty of Mr. Clemons, a switchman. When on cross-examination Lawyer Coulson suggested that sparks from the engine might have caused the fire, Mr. Gordon said that, speaking from his experience as an engineer, it would be almost impossible for sparks to have caused it, as the wind was blowing in a wrong direction, and he was not using steam enough to emit any sparks, especially as the engine had a spark arrester. Mr. Coulson and Mr. Gordon had quite a discussion in regard to the spark question, but the latter held firm to the assertion that sparks could not have been the cause.

Albert E. Clemons, employed as a switchman by the B. & M., next testified that he saw the young man near the turn-table switch, when Mr. Gordon gave the alarm. He (the boy) seemed to him to be "putting on airs" and was smoking a cigarette. Saw a pail eight or ten feet from the barn-door. Hunted for a ladder, but could not find one in the neighborhood. Judged that fire commenced on inside of the barn in the north-east corner. Mr. Clemons presented a plan of the premises and explained it.

Chief of Police Cheever testified to being present at the fire, when house was burning. Walked toward the barn, saw the pail, which was jammed, about four feet from barn-door. Boy had gone, but he went and helped pull the engine. He seemed excited when I approached and acted queer.

This concluded the testimony and Lawyer Coulson for the defence said there was not a scintilla of evidence showing that the boy was guilty of the crime and briefly reviewed the case.

Judge Poor then summed up the arguments for the prosecution, and thought from the evidence given, there was probable cause for holding the boy, and so ordered him to recognize in the sum of $3000 for the coming term of the Superior Court.

Mr. Coulson did not put the defendant on the stand, because he said he did not think it necessary; and when informed by the judge that it would probably not change his decision in regard to holding him, he said he certainly should not. The boy was committed to Lawrence jail, as no bail was forthcoming.

OBITUARY.

B. FRANK POOR.

B. Frank Poor of Bennington, Vt., only son of the late Jonathan Poor, died in Frye Village at the home of his mother, Tuesday the 30th, at the age of 42 years, 1 month. Mr. Poor has not resided in Andover for many years, having left home at the age of 16; since then he has, for the greater part of the time, been employed in woollen and hosiery mills in New York state and in Bennington.

His employers always found him capable and a willing worker, and he held positions of responsibility and trust. After going to Bennington he was married and leaves a widow and three young children. In all his domestic relations he was most exemplary, and will be sadly missed in his family. Undoubtedly he was another victim of the grip, having suffered from that two years in succession. He came to Andover, to the home of his youth, four weeks ago, hoping to be benefited, but the disease had developed into consumption and the change and all remedies proved unavailing. The remains have been taken to Bennington for interment, accompanied by his wife, who arrived here only last Sunday. Rev. Mr. Wilson of the Free Church conducted brief services at the house. On arrival at Bennington the lodge of Odd Fellows, of which Mr. Poor was a highly esteemed member, would take charge. He was also a member of the Second Congregational Church.

Jane Haggerty, wife of James Haggerty, died at her home on Main street last Monday at the age of 50 years. She had been in ill health for about a year, the disease phthisis pulmonatis. Deceased was a hard working woman and respected by those who knew her. Quite a large family is left to mourn her loss. The funeral services were held Wednesday morning at St. Augustine's church and the remains were interred in the Catholic cemetery.

Frye Village.

The small store belonging to Annie Mitchell was again broken into last Saturday night. It is thought that entrance was gained through a back window. Matches were found strewn about on the floor and other evidence that someone had been in there. Miss Mitchell can not tell what was taken, but it is supposed that, if anything, it was tobacco and cigars. There was no money for them to get hold of. It is a general opinion that some miscreant about the village is doing this work.

Mr. and Mrs. David Middleton are on their way home and are expected here soon.

Bruce Ritchie of Stoughton, was here this week, and Alex Ritchie and Charles Riddoch, who have been visiting there came with him.

Katie Cobbs of Lawrence, who has been staying at the home of Mrs. Blake for the past few weeks, died very suddenly this morning, about 3 o'clock. She was out yesterday, and walked quite a distance. The trouble was stated to have been consumption. She had been staying here to see if the change would benefit her.

Mrs. William Gillespie and children are visiting in Wilmington.

Beware of quack medicines would seem to be the conclusion from Mrs. Alfred Playdon's experience this week. Wednesday, a peddler selling patent medicine called at the Playdon home, told Mrs. Playdon when she had a tired feeling, if she took his medicine it would soon be of great help to her. He also stated that one and a half tea-spoonfuls would be the right dose for her. It is understood that it was some magic liniment. Yesterday morning she thought she would try the medicine, but no sooner had she swallowed it than a terrible death-like feeling came over her. She could not speak, but managed to attract attention, and medical aid was sought. Dr. Abbott came and found her in a critical condition. He called it paralysis of the heart. It was at first thought she would not recover, but to-day she seemed much better.

Examination.

An examination for the benefit of those who failed to pass, or, for good and sufficient reasons were absent from the spring examination, will be given on Sept. 7, at 9 a.m., in the Central Grammar School Building, Andover.

W. A. BALDWIN, Superintendent.

Pronounced Hopeless, yet Saved.

From a letter written by Mrs. Ada E. Hurd, of Groton, S.D., we quote: "Was taken with a bad cold, which settled on my Lungs, cough set in and finally terminated in Consumption. Four doctors gave me up saying I could live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Saviour, determined if I could not stay with my friends on earth I would my absent ones above. My husband was advised to get D. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and colds I gave it a trial took in all, eight bottles; it has cured me, and thank God I am now a well and hearty woman." Trial bottles free at Arthur Bliss' and H. M. Whitney's Lawrence. Large bottles 50c. and $1.00.

BALLARDVALE.

Rev. C. H. Fuller and wife will return to-day from their vacation in Maine and Mr. Fuller will occupy the pulpit at the Methodist church.

There will be preaching at the Union Church Sunday though it is not definitely known who will be the preacher.

Arthur Ward, young son of W. F. Ward, broke his right arm near the wrist last Saturday while playing "circus." The break was in a bad place.

Gardner Shattuck is able to be out and around again.

Miss Nellie Holmes is in Tilton, N. H.

Everyone will be interested to know that the Bradlee Course of entertainments will be given this year as usual and the arrangements are now being made by Messrs. H. F. Wilson and Joseph Shaw. The first entertainment will be held Wednesday evening, Nov. 2. Several new features will be incorporated into this course. A personal friend of Abraham Lincoln will lecture on his recollections of the martyr president and an editor of one of the Boston dailies will lecture on the modern newspaper. Several other new things are promised and with the best of those we have had will undoubtedly prove a good course.

Mrs. L. A. M. Von Grave and son have gone to New York city.

Barges will leave here at different times Monday for the Christian Endeavor picnic at Shady Side grove. The time of leaving has not been definitely settled but full particulars can be obtained of D. H. Poor, President of the local society. A special train will leave South Lawrence for the grove at 9.05 a.m. The round trip fare by railroad will be 40 cents. A large delegation is desired.

Mrs. Charles Campbell and son of Lawrence were visiting L. A. Penney yesterday.

Abner McKinley, the New York lawyer, and a brother to Hon. Wm. McKinley, was in town Tuesday. Mr. McKinley is treasurer of the Essick Printing Telegraph Co., who are having the machines built by Craighead & Kintz Co.

Bert Mears was arrested Sunday afternoon on the charge of setting the fire of last week at the Sunction. Sufficient evidence was secured for his detention.

The Craighead & Kintz Co. are quite busy and will soon be working overtime.

LARGELY ARTIFICIAL.

The Original Portion of Him, However, Preserves Its Cheerfulness.

The clerks of the Grand say that the most cheerful man that ever staid there was M. Dowling, of Minneapolis, and he had $2000 worth of wooden legs and wooden arms. He wore them all himself. Without them he would not, to all appearances, have made much of a showing. Set up on his high cork legs, however, and with his arms pieced out with the same material, he would burst into the hotel like a ray of light on a dark, cloudy day. He was the victim of one of the playful blizzards of Minnesota. When it was over and he was gathered up from the snow it was difficult to tell what pieces would withstand the alurements of the gravedigger.

Some of him survived, however, and then he set about to see what he could do. Both legs were off close to the body. His left forearm was gone, and all he had remaining was the smallest stump of the thumb on the right hand. He practiced for awhile walking with the heavy leathern boots which everybody has seen legless men wear. Finally he raised enough money to buy cork extremities.

Mr. Dowling likes a joke, and when stopped on the street here and importuned for alms by men with one leg or arm, or both legs or arms gone, would immediately take them to restaurants and load them up with a big dinner, all the time listening to their tale of misfortune with the greatest interest.

When it was all over his face would lighten, and much to their astonishment he would begin shucking his legs and arms, exposing the hypocritical material of which they were made. At the same time he would tell how glad he would be if he was only as well supplied with legs and arms as they were. He would next tell them to brace up, take heart and begin to learn something useful to support themselves.

Mr. Dowling cannot use a cane because he cannot hold one. Therefore without aid he is forced to make his way. He has learned to do it so well that he can outrun any able-bodied man, however skillful he may be, who will hop while he runs. He has learned to grasp a pen or pencil with the small stump of a thumb, and he writes a beautiful hand very rapidly.—San Francisco Examiner.

It Used Him Up.

The man of the house took to the sofa in the sitting room with a newspaper directly after breakfast, while his wife went on with the housecleaning.

She was dismantling the front room, and while he pursued the sporting column she carried past him in turn seven chairs, three tables, a desk, four footstools, all of the pictures, a piano stool, a bookcase and the rest of the furniture. Then she lugged in a pair of steps and a big pail of water and began to clean.

"Maria, do you want any assistance?" said the man just then, rising and folding his newspaper.

"Not just yet, dear," said Maria. "Well, then, I think I'll leave you," said he and he started for the office.

On the way down he told three men that if there was anything that wore him to the skin and bone it was that confounded housecleaning. Said he, "We are in the midst of it now and I tell you I'm about used up."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

What Overwork Does.

There is a general agreement as to the fact that for a large number of our people overwork is the bane of existence. It not only exhausts their vitality, prematurely cutting short their lives, but it seriously interferes with their success, renders their services less valuable and spoils the happiness of their lives. It does not even end here. It affects others also in proportion to their nearness, for the family and friends of an overworked man always suffer. Jaded and worn he cannot fulfill his duties to them, nor afford them the comfort and happiness which he owes them and which they have a right to expect. He is, in truth, but half a man while he lives and is probably preparing to live out but half his days.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Hedgehog.

The hedgehog runs the roads in England freely. He is a quaint little fellow, our hedgehog, having far more intelligence than people give him credit for. It is curious, as you stand perfectly still in the middle of the road, to see him come running along, then stopping to sniff and whine and examine the high, strange object that hardly breathes lest he startle the little creature. Then with a gentle grunt he will pass you by. A very low yet decided grunt he gives, and he whines as well.—Blackwood's Magazine.

The Streets of Amsterdam.

Amsterdam, in Holland, a city of ten miles in circumference, is mostly built on piles driven into the sandy subsoil, but the flowing of the tide and the debris of the Amsel river has made ninety islands, and the city has more canals than streets. The watery ways are traversed by over 300 bridges, so that Amsterdam has earned the designation of the Venice of the North.—Boston Globe.

Willie's Part in the Discussion.

They sat with bowed heads about the table while the minister invoked the divine blessing.

"More light, O Lord," arose the prayer. "Send more light to guide our halting footsteps."

The small boy at the foot of the table moved uneasily.

"Amen."

It was the mother of the household who made a response to the preacher's petition.

"Ma, do!"

She managed to subdue the small boy until grace had been said.

"What is it, Willie?"

She spoke with excessive indulgence, as mothers are wont to do in the presence of company.

"Do you mean it?"

"Mean what, my child?"

"That you want more light."

The minister beamed cordially upon the youthful face. It pleased him to note signs of a religious awakening in the boyish mind.

"Certainly, my dear," the mother declared.

"We all need more light," the man of God smilingly insisted.

The lad pondered for a moment.

"Well," he observed at last positively, "all I can say is that you'd better look out."

"Why, Willie?"

"It'll go hard with you if you get more light, 'cause pa said if the gas bill got any bigger somebody would get scalped."

For several moments afterward conversation flagged.—Detroit Tribune.

Fighting a Domestic Cat.

"I have hunted tigers in India and polar bears in the regions of eternal snow, but the worst fight I ever had was with a common house cat," said G. W. Cooper. "I had a fine black cat of unusual size that I kept in the store to discourage mice. One day Tom disappeared and was gone during the entire summer. When he returned with the advent of cold weather it was easy to see that he had been prowling in the woods. He had become wild and savage, and when I attempted to caress him he bit me. I determined to punish him for that little bit of perversity, and procuring a switch followed him into the storehouse and shut the door. Now a tom cat that fights at fifteen pounds is no despicable antagonist, and I soon realized the fact.

"He would spring for my face and I would knock him back, losing considerable cuticle at each round. Finally he fastened his teeth in the side of my neck and it required all my strength to choke him off. When I succeeded in doing so I was afraid to let go of him, and he tore my arms terribly with his claws. I finished him at last, but I looked as though I had been run through a thrashing machine. Hereafter when I attempt to chastise a cat I will procure a suit of armor and a club studded with brass nails."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Way of the Transgressor.

Jepson had married his wife for no reason in the world except that she had money, though he lied to her like a pirate, and she thought it was a love match. Naturally wedded life was not sweet, and Jepson was getting the bitterest end of it. One day he met a friend.

"By George!" he exclaimed, "that wife of mine will drive me crazy."

"What's the matter now?" inquired the friend consolingly.

"You know my wife has $150,000, and you know I married her for it and got it. There is no use lying about that any further."

The friend bowed in acquiescence.

"Well, do you know that she has divided the whole thing up into sums of $100 each and proposes to have me arrested 1,500 times for obtaining money under false pretenses? Think of that, will you? Did you ever hear of such a woman?" And Jepson went into a spasm.—Detroit Free Press.

The Mississippi's Mouths.

When the jetties were built the other passes or mouths of the Mississippi river were not closed. On the contrary, they are all there, just as many of them as there have ever been in the historic period. The jetties were placed in the South pass when it was only eight feet deep. Now it is more than thirty feet deep, giving free passage to the largest class of ships. Southwest pass, which was formerly the chief channel of navigation and had to be dredged daily to secure an extreme depth of eighteen or nineteen feet, is now entirely neglected as a route for commerce, but as an outlet for the river water it is doing its duty, as are all the other passes.—New Orleans Picayune.

How Winifred Explained.

Winifred's grandmother had tried to explain to her about the letters that were vowels, and had told her that each word must have one or more of them in it. Later, the young lady wished to inform her papa upon the important subject. "Papa," she said, "the reason they are called vowels is because there has to be one in every word—and they vow they will get there."—New York Tribune.

A Manly Feeling.

Every one thinks he must have looked frightfully green when he was young and flatters himself that he looks very wise now.—Atchison Globe.

American Opals.

An opal, found and cut as a gem in this country, was sold by a jeweler in this city the other day for $500. It was obtained from a newly discovered mine in the state of Washington, near the Idaho line. At that place, which has been called Gem City, the volcanic rocks are honey-combed with cavities that contain small nodules of this precious variety of hydrated quartz. Many of them are of great beauty and value.

Speaking of this discovery of American opals, Mr. George F. Kunz, the expert in gems employed by Tiffany & Co., exhibited to the reporter the great Hope opal, one of the most celebrated in the world. It formerly belonged to Henry Philip Hope, the Dutch banker, who owned the finest collection of precious stones ever got together. He liquidated the national debt of Brazil and took his pay in diamonds from that country, which originally inspired him with his hobby. Among the well known gems possessed by him was the Hope diamond, a blue-white stone of forty-four carats, valued at $100,000; likewise the largest existing pearl, drop shaped, which weighed over three ounces, surmounted in the setting by a coronet of diamonds.

The opal referred to, though of Mexican origin, is said to have been among the ornaments of a Persian shrine in the Seventeenth century. It represents the sun with a full face carved on its surface, the rays being supplied by the antique gold setting. As is very common with Mexican opals, it is badly flawed—in fact, so cracked that it would probably fall to pieces if the setting were removed. It is oval in shape and its longest diameter is about an inch.—New York Sun.

The Loquacious Barber.

The loquacity of a barber gives the satirical Persian the opportunity of many witty proverbs, and all at the barber's expense. The Hindoo has as much dread of his tattling propensities as the European, but it is currently believed their gossip saved many a life during the terrible year 1857-8. The chatter of the bazaar the barber has on his tongue tip, and the slightest encouragement to unloosen the bag wherein he stores his tales is gladly seized.

The injustice of the petty native judges, the exacting demands of the cantonment magistrate, the monetary embarrassments of some young sub in one of the regiments, the flirtation of a married belle are duly narrated, and even the contents of the letters which pass between the pair can by astute questioning become the common property of an entire station.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Eighth Regiment at Salem.

Colonel Mills of the Eighth Regiment has sent to the Boston Herald the following in reference to the charges that some of his command were disorderly at Salem on returning from Gloucester:

"When I found that the Haverhill and North Andover companies would miss their connection at Salem on account of the delay in leaving Gloucester, I went to the station and had them telegraph to Boston to see what arrangements could be made without their going to Boston. Upon arriving at Beverly I was informed that an extra would take them from Salem, but it seems they were delayed nearly two hours. One man in Company C was intoxicated and kept under arrest, and action has already been taken in his case, and also two men from Company H, who stayed in Gloucester without permission. I have conversed with parties in Salem who were in the depot until 8.15 and was informed that there was no boisterous conduct, no more than could be expected, and he positively saw no one intoxicated. I can't find that there is any good grounds for the exaggerated reports that have been published."

Colonel Mills has been ordered by the commander-in-chief to investigate the charges.

His First Battle.

The name of Durosier deserves to be historic as that of one of the bravest of French soldiers, although the noble young fellow who bore it saw but one battle. Timoleon Durosier was one of the first students admitted to the Ecole Polytechnique, and at the period of the invasion was gazetted to an ensignship.

At the battle of Montmirail he chanced to be in attendance on the emperor at the moment when it became essential to dispatch an order to one of the generals of division.

Napoleon, summoning him to his side, gave him instructions to deliver it without delay.

"Spare neither yourself nor your horse, sir," he said sternly. "For there is not a moment to lose, and return at once and report to me that my order has been obeyed."

Durosier galloped away amid a shower of shot and shells, and within a quarter of an hour was again beside the emperor.

"You have behaved well, monsieur," said Napoleon, when he had received his report. "You have a stout heart and a clear head, though you are still only a youngster. I give you your captain's brevet and attach you to my person. What is your name?"

"Durosier, sire."

"On what occasion have I before heard it?"

"I was the colonel of the boy battalion, your majesty."

"I remember. Well, that is additional reason why I should attach you to my person."

"It is too late, sire."

"Too late, Captain Durosier? And why?"

"Sire, they have hit me," and he reeled in his saddle and fell heavily forward dead.

"So young; his first battlefield!" exclaimed the emperor, bending over him. "Poor boy!"—Youth's Companion.

HE COULDN'T TELL A LIE.

A Pennsylvania Driller Enlightens the Inhabitants of Wyoming.

The following story was printed in the Casper (Wy.) Derrick, and shows that the Pennsylvania driller may be miles from home and yet retain his characteristics, and does not allow any microbes of veracity that may inhabit faraway regions to get into his imagination and injure it. A westerner tells the story as a man from Bradford told it:

He said that one time several years ago he was engaged in drilling an oil well near Bradford, Pa. When at a depth of 1,973 feet the cable broke, letting the tools down in the hole, and they had a serious fishing job on hand. After various throws and a skillful manipulation of the reel the bobble began to bob and the tools were safely landed. It appeared, however, that just about the time the cable broke the drill had reached a small vein of water, and the force of the drill falling broke through the cap rock, and the hole filled up so that it was necessary to case it off.

He said he was standing over the hole when he took out his watch, a fine gold stemwinder, a present from his wife, which he carelessly carried without a chain, and his hands being greasy from oil, the watch slipped through his fingers and dropped right down in the hole. He at once undertook to fish it out, but though he tried every known means, he was unsuccessful and gave up the attempt. He eased off the water and set the drill to work, but carefully examined the contents of the sand pump, hoping to get some small portion of it to preserve as a keepsake, yet never a trace of gold could he find.

Several months later he drilled another hole on an adjoining farm some three miles distant, going, of course, through the same formation, and at the depth of 1,979 feet he again struck the crevice of water. He put the hand pump to work, and in the sand and water which he brought up he found his watch, which he had lost several months before in the other hole, three miles away.

"Was the watch running?" asked Uncle Mat, the Peruvian chief, with a twinkle in his eye, as he relit his pipe which he had neglected, so interested was he in the narrative.

"Yes," replied Brad, as he looked around to assure himself that the rear door was not locked. "That is the strangest part of the story. The watch was going and had correct time. It was accounted for in this way: The watch had a very fine watertight case, and it happened that the water was flowing through a thin flat crevice or vein in the rock, and the force of the water carried the watch—which evidently laid on its side, the side of the stem resting on the bottom of the rock—slowly with it, and there was just enough friction on the stem to gradually wind it up as it moved along, thus keeping it going, and though it had moved three miles under nearly 2,000 feet of earth during the period of several months, it had never lost a second."—Detroit Free Press.
